I want

The Ubuntu experience

on Nokia's internet tablets

Ubuntu:

single source of packages

Ubuntu:

single bug tracker

Ubuntu:

one straightforward way to get and build things from sources

Ubuntu:

vast knowledge base

blogs, forums, lists, bug tracker

Ubuntu:

Community makes it possible

34,000+ packages

Canonical, Inc. knew that

and focused on community-building from the very beginning

What can Nokia do?

Steal ideas from Ubuntu

Attract great people

Give them direction

someone has to maintain the infrastructure

Make it easy to contribute

make maemo.org fast reduce confusion

Actually...

Nokia is already doing all this it's great to see the improvements

Some friction still exists

Incompatible values

profit vs community

keeping source closed

we don't care what or why we care that it's closed and sometimes it really makes things difficult

refusing open codecs

ogg vorbis, theora

scary EULAs

I'm not allowed to translate the software?

Hope for some middle ground

a successful software ecosystem increases profits

Internet tablets are fun to use

no time left for development
